An arms-length relationship would better reflect the decline in both confluence of interests and strategic importance to the United States. Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates' (UAE) decision at the March 31 OPEC+ meeting to refuse to use their substantial spare production capacity to offset widely anticipated losses in export volumes, while also tying the decision to a pressure campaign on the Biden administration for concessions on other issues, represents a major departure from the unspoken but well understood “oil for security” tradeoff.

What's Happening:

- Are Saudi Arabia and the UAE No Longer U.S. Partners?
- GCC Economies Have a Strong Start to 2022 But Challenges Remain
- Oil Prices Swing Amid Worsening Ukraine Crisis, Libya Output Halt and China's Covid Curbs
